If you don't have the TAT app yet, download it now ... it's better than ever!

To better serve the variety of audiences now using the TAT app on their phones, TAT has refreshed its app content and added a number of new capabilities. The app can now:

- Tailor red flag content specifically for various stakeholders, such as school transportation, over-the-road truckers, rideshare drivers, transit, in-home delivery professionals, etc.
- Enhance reporting capabilities for users with geo-location potential and best display call options, including, where available, local hotline numbers.
- Enable TAT the opportunity to track the total number of tips

- being reported via the app.
- Gather data from willing users/reporters on what they're seeing as to potential human trafficking situations.
- Provide a direct communication channel to app users.

Download the TAT App

New update!

- Tailored red flag content
- Enhanced reporting capabilities
- Track tips reported through the app
- Gather data on reported potential human trafficking
- Direct communication with app users

Anyone already using the TAT app on their phone will automatically be upgraded to the new app, as long as they're keeping up on their app updates. Download it here for Android users and here for iOS users.

TAT creates free, on-demand law enforcement training modules

Law Enforcement Modules - TRAILER

Believing law enforcement at every level need victim-centered, human trafficking training -- but recognizing the physical impossibility of providing that in-person, given the magnitude of law enforcement nationwide -- TAT has created free, on-demand modules, with interactive activities and accompanying e-toolkit to provide training accessibility everywhere. Available now, these modules allow law enforcement officers in any size office anywhere to receive TAT's in-depth law enforcement training.

Modules can be selected individually or completed in a series. Law enforcement command staff, human trafficking survivors, victims' advocates and TAT trainers provide sessions, including Human Trafficking 101, Engaging Trafficking Victims: Best Practices, Human Trafficking Indicators at Interdiction Stops with Case Studies, Unlikely Allies: The Importance of the Commercial Vehicle Industry in Combating Human Trafficking, and Addressing Demand: No Buyer = No Victim.

The complimentary e-toolkit contains law enforcement resources, policies to implement, tech tools, victim service provider lists and information on criminal records and survivor well-being and problem-solving courts. The trailer for the modules can be accessed here. The modules themselves can be requested by sending an email to le@truckersagainstrafficking.org.

"Having trained law enforcement officers for the last seven years, I realized both the desire by law enforcement for training on human trafficking and our limits as an organization for being able to reach them all through in-person training," explained Kylla Lanier, TAT deputy director and senior director of Public Sector Engagement. "These on-demand modules, which provide six hours of training in total if taken as a series, exponentially accelerate TAT's ability to reach law enforcement agencies of all sizes and locations. This makes me incredibly happy. This training is our gift to law enforcement for the difficult and, often, thankless job they do every day.”

Addressing Demand webinar attracts diverse audience

In early December, TAT's Addressing Demand webinar attracted 75 participants from 37 companies and seven government agencies representing a wide range of sectors and industries.

This webinar, part of TAT's three-part Connecting the Dots series included a panel with Alan Smyth, the executive director of Saving Innocence, and Neil Getzlow, author and host of the podcast "Unmasked."

The hour-long session began with a brief overview of TAT, buyers of commercial sex and the importance to target them, how the demand for commercial sex fuels and intersects with human trafficking, online safety and the link between pornography and human trafficking before moving to the panel discussion. Panel topics included:

- The expectations of masculinity (what it means to act like a man, toxic masculinity and its effects, how young boys/teens are taught about sex and love)
- Pornography (its portrayal of women and minorities, its effects and mainstream appearance, how it has shaped the understanding of human sexuality and how it intersects with human trafficking)
- The demand for purchasing sex (who and where are sex buyers, demand for commercial sex in the transportation industry, how those in the transportation industry can spot potential human trafficking situations, those harmed by sex buying, the role of demand in sex trafficking, what can be done to stop demand by both those in the transportation and the general public)
- Social support (the importance of social support systems, mental health awareness)
- Relationships (healthy and unhealthy relationships, the importance of relationships)
- Steps moving forward (how to help end commercial sexual exploitation and gender-based violence individually, in relationships, in your communities, and in society)

The concluding presentation emphasized the truth that with no buyers, the crime of sex trafficking would cease to exist and provided additional next steps, various resources and time for questions. Ten attendees expressed the desire to host this webinar for their companies, agencies or organizations in 2024. Already scheduled for this year are Addressing Demand presentations for UPS, the Atlanta Children's Hospital, the Georgia Human Trafficking Task Force and the Mid-Columbia Human Trafficking Task Force.

TAT staff provide presentations to diverse audiences in Illinois

TAT Deputy Director Kylla Lanier, along with Joy Friedman, survivor-leader and founder of The Missing Peace, conducted a four-hour training for 200 frontline workers in Paris, Illinois on Dec. 1. They also presented to a group of 50 community members later that evening, sharing practical ways to help lessen vulnerabilities in a community in order to safeguard people from traffickers and other exploiters.

“Trafficking is just as much of an issue locally as it is nationally,” commented Officer Doug Cochran of the Kansas, Illinois Police Department. “We’re trying to get boots on the ground and keep everyone informed. Not only is this a real issue, but it's a growing issue for our area as well as the state of Illinois. This is more than a law enforcement issue; it's an issue for all citizens to become aware about and get involved."

Lanier said, "We're grateful to The CARE Coalition of Edgar County, and especially Officer Doug Cochran, for organizing this training and allowing us to share this vital information."

Lanier and Friedman spoke to about 200 frontline workers in Paris, Illinois.

JANUARY IS NATIONAL HUMAN TRAFFICKING AWARENESS MONTH IN THE U.S.

While the trucking industry is often in the spotlight for its role in the economy, it is also a sector where human trafficking is a growing concern. This resource packet provides information on how to recognize and prevent human trafficking in the trucking industry.

- 1. Know the signs: Look for signs of human trafficking, such as workers who are afraid to speak up, workers who are not paid, or workers who are being forced to work long hours.
- 2. Report it: If you suspect human trafficking, report it to the appropriate authorities. In the U.S., you can call the National Human Trafficking Hotline at 1-888-373-7888.
- 3. Provide support: If you know someone who is a victim of human trafficking, provide them with support and resources. This could include helping them find a safe place to stay, finding them a job, or helping them get medical care.
- 4. Advocate for change: Advocate for changes in the trucking industry that would help prevent human trafficking. This could include advocating for better pay, better working conditions, and stronger enforcement of labor laws.
- 5. Educate yourself: Learn more about human trafficking and its impact on the trucking industry. This will help you recognize the signs and prevent it from happening again.
- 6. Support the victims: Support the victims of human trafficking by donating to organizations that provide them with support and resources.
